

MISSION CHAMPIONS

For 75 years, the people of our organization have contributed significantly to the readiness of our military forces and improving the quality of life for military families around the globe. There are countless champions who have built, contributed to, or supported that mission and its history.

“The reason we study history is because it is one of the experiences of being alive. Without understanding how much we have that others made possible isn’t just an obligation, it’s part of the enjoyment of being human.”

– David McCullough
Pulitzer Prize winning historian

Mission Champions helps to bring alive the stories of just a few of those champions whose individual actions advanced the teamwork and momentum needed to provide quality educational services to the children who attend our schools and to their families who sacrifice so much to serve our country. Each of these champions represent and preserve a legacy built by thousands of educators and support personnel committed to advancing the DoDEA mission.
